In 1921, Florence Italy was the pinnacle of the fashion scene. Italy was well known for top range clothing and leather goods. Guccio Gucci founded his fashion house in that era, taking advantage of the world's desire for great quality clothing and leather wear from Italy. The name took off like a rocket, with Guccio expanding to open a clothing boutique in Rome just 15 years later. Guccio, the owner designed many of the products that were most famous and well received, such as the trademark handbag with the bamboo handles, and the leather sandals that are still in the company offerings today, nearly 100 years later. When Guccio died in 1953, he left behind him multiple sons, three of whom played a pivotal role in the company's future. Aldo, the eldest led the company to prominence on the international scene, with their New York boutiques, but the family became nearly as famed for their fighting as they were for their fashions. The day in and day out operations of the company led to serious conflicts for the family which in the end, nearly cost them their business. Cheap imitation products began to appear on the market that the company simply could not stop. The saving grace for the Guccio family at that time was the perfumes division which proved to sell nearly as much, and then more, than the actual clothing line. The Guccio company was saved by their perfumes and accessories line from bankruptcy. Today, the house of Guccio is owned by a French company, but still carries designs made by the original Guccio family. The House of Guccio and the Guccio group is today owned by the French company known as Pinault-Printemps-Redoute, who have returned most of the original luster and glamour to the Guccio products and businesses. Guccio is once more a fashion house of high reputation and is once more on top of their game. Controls put into place by the new owners have made the house of Gucci what it once was, and in fact, something more. According to BusinessWeek, the House of Gucci made more than 2 billion euros in 2008 and in 2009 climbed to an unprecedented 41st slot on the Business week top 100 Global Brands list. The House of Gucci today enjoys a reputation as one of the hottest brands of clothing world wide. It is the largest selling Italian clothing and accessories maker in the entire world these days and the hot new items that come out with each new season tell us that it's going to be staying there. Gucci has also entered into an agreement with Unicef, and a portion of the money made from Gucci clothing and accessories goes to Unicef Childrens services.,, Women of today are very fashion-conscious. They like to shop for bags, jewelries, clothes, shoes and other fashion items and accessories. Designer shoes are a great demand among women. For those who can afford designer luxury shoes prefer to buy from famous designer outlets or boutiques. But for some, designer luxury footwear may cost a fortune which mid and low range earners certainly can't afford. Designer replica shoes are good option for those who are style conscious but do not want to spend much on buying designer items. Replica shoes can get the expensive look to your feet at very less and affordable cost. Shoes are considered part of fashion and style that has brought in the craze for the luxury and designer footwear. Replica items are in demand these days because of less price tag and easy availability. Many online stores sell these items and money spent on them can be worth every penny. The official name of the company is "The House of Gucci" since it is one of the famous Italian fashion houses. However, Gucci is actually owned by a french conglomerate called Pinault-Printemps-Redoute (PPR). The founder of the brand was Guccio Gucci who founded the brand in Florence, Italy in 1921. The brand is most famous for Italian fashion and leather products. One thing that sets Gucci aside from other brands is that is the top selling Italian brand in the world. The story of the brand is an interesting and turbulent one since its humble beginnings in 1921. Guccio Gucci in 1921, it wasnt until 1938 that Gucci expanded out of Florence and opened a new boutique in Rome. When Guccio died in 1953, he left his fashion empire to his 4 sons. His son Aldo was central to the brands expansion into the world market since he opened the first Gucci boutique in New York. Further expansion, into Hong Kong and Tokyo occurred in the 1960s where Guccio was creating their own trends via celebrities like Jackie Kennedy, Grace Kelly, etc. However, during this time the family was in constant in-fighting. Reports at the time suggested the family fought during board meetings about inheritance, stock holdings, and how to operate the company. The company hit a terrible rough patch in the 1970s and leading into the 1980s. At that time the brothers Rodolfo and Aldo controlled the company with equal shares. This occurred once again, due to complicated family fights. The company launched their accessories and perfume division and began to wholesale aggressively in order to expand that division. Aldo had developed that division and his intention was to focus on it in order to weaken the control of his brother Rodolfo. The perfume division was priced cheaper than other products and aggressive wholesaling made it available for sale in over 1000 stores. The result was the brand image was severely tarnished. The public now viewed Gucci as a cheap airport brand and not an exclusive luxury brand. Furthermore at the same time, widespread Gucci knock-offs started to appear on the market further weakening the brands image. In 1983, the company was suffering financially and in brand image. Paolo Gucci (son of Aldo) proposed the idea of launching a cheap version of Gucci called Gucci Plus, the idea was not well accepted by the family. During a Gucci boardroom meeting about this issue Paolo was knocked out by an answering machine to the the face, by one of his brothers. For revenge, he reported his father to the United States authorities for tax evasion. His father was convicted of tax evasion and sent to prison after his son testified against him in court. These stories generated more interest in the Gucci family, then the brand's advertising could possibly achieve at the time. Rodolfo died in 1983. This resulted in changes in the power structure of the company (family). His son Maurizio Gucci inherited his 50% share of the Gucci company. Aldo's son Paolo along with Maurizio teamed together to take control of the Board of Directors. Shortly after, the rest of the family left the company. This led Maurizio to seek help and ideas from outside the company in order to strengthen the brand and the company and operate peacefully. Gucci Shoes became one of the companies strong points. Gucci found following the disasters of the 1970s and 1980s that a return to its roots as an elite Italian fashion house was a must. They realized that it was impossible to be both a mass production brand and a luxury brand. The leather goods like Gucci shoes had given the company its name in the 1920s and 1930s and they felt they needed to focus their efforts on fashion innovations in those areas. Furthermore, in 1997 Gucci took over Severin-Montres and rebranded it under the Gucci name. The watchmaker was one of the most respected in Europe at the time and contributed to Guccis goals of maintaining their prestige and elite image amongst fashion conscious and wealthy consumers.,, Whether you call for just about any pair of loafers or sneakers or oxford footwear Gucci have them all.
